A question of subtle ethics and nice law has been decided in Philadelphia. An old lady had a parrot, and because it swore a pious little girl threw a handful of snuff in its face, from which it died, with profanity on its tongue. A justice was called no to decide judicially which did the greater wrong, the parrot or the girl. After the examination of the witnesses, the arguments of counsel and due deliberation by the court, the case was decided in favor of the parrot, or the parrot's owner. Thus it will be seen that parrots which are compelled to live that parrots which are compelled to live in Philadelphia will be protected in their

JOURNALISTS AND THEIR TASK.

How a Few Degenerate to Seek Riches In Another Chair.

Joe Howard writes as follows to the Philadelphia Pres: "There is one thing about a newspaper, its work is so exacting that the workers have but little time that the workers have but little time that the workers have but little time must be up and at if every day in every year. Apper which makes its appearabre hundred and sixty-dive days in every year, continuing right along without holidays or intermissions of any kind, could well imagine. The consequence is that journalists work hard. They do work with maryellous expenditure of nerve and energy, and drop out of harness generally with a suddenness and lack of preparation not to be found in power, more enjoyment, and more satisfaction in the better walks of journalism than in any other profession. As for money—well that depends. A writer who hankers after cash soon degenerates and becomes a proprietor, not a writer."
